Product Description

About:

Brown eggs are a type of chicken egg, and they are known for their brown-colored shells. Brown eggs have brown or tan-colored shells, which is a result of pigments in the chicken's breed. The color of the eggshell has no impact on the taste or nutritional content of the egg.

Brown eggs and white eggs have virtually the same nutritional value. They contain protein, vitamins, minerals, and healthy fats. The nutritional content of an egg is more influenced by the chicken's diet than the color of the eggshell. Brown eggs are often thought to have a slightly stronger or richer flavor compared to white eggs. However, this difference is usually very subtle and may not be noticeable in most recipes.
