Product Description

About:

Housewarming garlands, also known as "Griha Pravesh garlands" in Indian culture, are special decorations used to celebrate and bless a new home. These garlands are typically made of auspicious and fragrant materials and are used during the housewarming ceremony to invoke blessings and prosperity for the new dwelling.

Housewarming garlands hold great significance in many cultures, including Hindu, Indian, and some Southeast Asian traditions. Housewarming garlands are often made of fresh and fragrant flowers, herbs, and leaves. Common choices include marigolds, mango leaves, neem leaves, and jasmine flowers. The garlands are carefully prepared, often by family members or a priest, with prayers and mantras recited during the process to invoke blessings. During the housewarming ceremony, the garlands play a central role. They are offered to the deities in the home shrine, such as Lord Ganesha, to seek their blessings and protection for the new home.
