About:

Turmeric Finger scientific Name is Curcuma longa. Its Family Zingiberaceae (Ginger family) and Native to South Asia, particularly India. Turmeric is renowned for its underground rhizomes, resembling fingers or tubers, from which the spice is derived.

Large, lance-shaped leaves with a green hue that arise from the rhizome. The inflorescence, although less known, produces cone-like spikes with small, yellow flowers. Turmeric boasts a warm, bitter, and slightly peppery flavor, adding depth to a variety of dishes. The spice imparts a distinctive golden-yellow hue to foods. Integral to Indian, Southeast Asian, and Middle Eastern cuisines, turmeric is a key ingredient in curry blends, rice dishes, stews, and marinades. Turmeric thrives in tropical climates with well-drained soil, receiving ample sunlight and rainfall. Turmeric is available in both fresh and dried forms, with dried and ground turmeric being more common in international markets.
